

STATEMENT OF HOME TIES TO BANGLADESH

Date: February 10, 2026

Applicant: Sayad Ibne azad

My name is Sayad Ibne azad. I am a devoted husband, a loving father, and a responsible son. My entire family life is centered here in Bangladesh. My father, Titu, and my mother, Mina, reside here. They are both aging and rely on me greatly for support and care. I live with my wife and our children in our family home. Our children are still young and completely dependent on my presence and guidance. My wife and I are raising them here, providing them with a stable and nurturing environment. The bonds we share are very deep. We celebrate all our festivals and important family occasions together as a unit. Our daily lives are intertwined. I am the head of our household, and my family looks to me for leadership, emotional support, and financial stability. Leaving them for an extended period is simply not an option for me. My commitment to their well-being and future is unwavering. They are the most important part of my life, and my happiness and purpose are found in being with them every day. This strong family foundation firmly anchors me to Bangladesh, and I cannot imagine building a life anywhere else.

I own and operate a business named b. This is a g business that I established several years ago. I am the founder, owner, and primary operator of this company. My business requires my constant attention and hands-on supervision. I am responsible for all major decisions that affect its direction and growth. I manage the daily operations, ensuring everything runs smoothly and efficiently. This includes overseeing production, sales, and customer service. I am also directly responsible for employee management. I hire, train, and supervise all our staff. Their livelihoods depend entirely on the success of b and my consistent presence. I manage all financial aspects, from budgeting to investment. Business development is another key area I handle personally, constantly seeking new opportunities and partnerships. If I am not present, the business would falter quickly. My employees would face uncertainty, and my customers would lose trust. My company is not just a source of income; it is my life's work and a vital part of the local economy, providing jobs and services.

Beyond my family and business, I have significant property and financial assets in Bangladesh. I own the house where my family and I currently live. This is not just a residence; it is our permanent home and a substantial investment. Additionally, I own several parcels of land. These properties represent my long-term financial stability and are a crucial part of my family's future security. My investments are all located within Bangladesh. I maintain several bank accounts, both for personal savings and for my business operations, all within Bangladeshi financial institutions. These accounts hold my entire financial wealth and are essential for managing my daily life and business needs. My assets here are considerable, and they are a clear testament to my deep and lasting commitment to Bangladesh. Managing these properties and financial commitments requires my ongoing presence and attention. I have built my entire financial life here, and these assets firmly root me to my home country.

My connection to Bangladesh extends far beyond just my family, business, and property. I am deeply embedded in the cultural and social fabric of my community. Bangladesh is my homeland; it is where I was born, grew up, and have spent my entire life. I actively participate in local cultural events and traditions. Festivals such as Eid are very important to me and my family, and we celebrate them with great enthusiasm alongside our community. I have a wide network of friends, neighbors, and extended family members with whom I share strong bonds. We support each other in times of need and celebrate together in times of joy. I am also connected to my local religious community. I attend prayers regularly at our neighborhood mosque and participate in various community initiatives organized there. These social and cultural ties provide a sense of belonging and identity that is invaluable to me. They define who I am and where I belong in the world.

In summary, my reasons for returning to Bangladesh are overwhelming and deeply personal. My beloved wife and young children depend on me completely for their well-being and future. My aging parents also rely on my consistent care and support. My business, b, which I founded and operate, demands my constant presence. It is my life's work, and the livelihoods of my employees are tied directly to my leadership. Furthermore, my significant property holdings and financial investments are all firmly established in Bangladesh, representing my entire financial security. My strong cultural, social, and religious ties further solidify my commitment to this country. Bangladesh is not just a place; it is my home, my past, my present, and my future. I have built my entire life here and have absolutely no intention of abandoning it. I will certainly return to Bangladesh immediately after completing my necessary travel.
