

STATEMENT OF HOME TIES TO BANGLADESH

Date: February 04, 2026

Applicant: Sayad Ibna Azad

My name is Sayad Ibna Azad. I am a Bangladeshi citizen living in Jhiltuly, Faridpur. My family is the most important part of my life, and they are the main reason I am deeply rooted in my home country. I live with my beloved parents, Abul Kalam Azad and Tahmina Beegum, in our family home. This house has been in our family for many generations. It holds countless memories and represents our heritage. My father, Abul Kalam Azad, is now seventy-two years old. My mother, Tahmina Beegum, is sixty-eight. They are both getting older and rely on me for their daily care and support. As their eldest son, I feel a strong sense of duty to look after them. My parents' health requires regular attention, and I personally ensure they attend their doctor's appointments and receive proper medication. My younger sister, Fahmida, is currently studying at Faridpur Government College, and I also support her education and personal growth. Beyond my immediate family, I have a wide network of aunts, uncles, and cousins who live very close by in Jhiltuly. We celebrate all holidays and family events together. Our family gatherings are a cornerstone of my social life. These close connections make Faridpur much more than just a place to live; it is truly my home, filled with the people I love and cherish. My identity is strongly linked to my family and our shared life here.

I am a Senior Developer at Sayad IT, a company based right here in Faridpur. I founded Sayad IT five years ago. It has grown into a reputable local firm providing software solutions to various clients across Bangladesh. My role is absolutely critical to the company's daily operations and future success. I am responsible for leading our main development projects. This involves designing software architectures, overseeing coding standards, and ensuring project deadlines are met. I also manage a team of five junior developers, guiding them and reviewing their work. My direct involvement is essential for the quality and efficiency of our projects. For instance, we are currently working on a major e-commerce platform for a large local business. This project is in a crucial development phase. My expertise and leadership are needed every day to keep it on track. Without my constant presence and guidance, this project would face serious delays. We also have several new client proposals in the pipeline, which I am personally responsible for securing and planning. My long-term vision is to expand Sayad IT's services to new markets, and I am actively working on strategies for this expansion. This business is not just my job; it is my passion and my creation. It provides livelihoods for my employees and serves many clients. I am deeply committed to its growth and continued success.

Beyond my family and business, I have significant property and financial ties in Bangladesh that anchor me firmly to this country. I own the family home in Jhiltuly, Faridpur, where I live with my parents. This house is a substantial asset, representing years of hard work and ancestral legacy. I am responsible for its maintenance and upkeep. In addition to our residence, I also own three plots of agricultural land on the outskirts of Faridpur. These lands are leased out to local farmers, and I regularly manage these leases and oversee the land. The income from these properties is an important part of my financial portfolio. I also have several substantial fixed deposits and savings accounts in various reputable banks in Bangladesh. These accounts are where I manage my personal and business finances. I also have investments in local bonds and shares. These financial commitments represent a significant portion of my wealth and are managed exclusively within the Bangladeshi financial system. I am also the primary signatory on my company's bank accounts, which hold significant funds for operations and future investments. All these properties and financial assets require my direct oversight and management. They are integral to my financial stability and my future plans in Bangladesh. Selling or moving these assets would be a complex and disruptive process that I have no intention of pursuing.

My connection to Bangladesh goes deeper than just my family, job, and property. I am also deeply woven into the cultural and social fabric of Faridpur. I grew up here, and this community is an extension of my family. I am an active member of the local mosque committee in Jhiltuly. I participate in regular prayers and volunteer my time for community welfare programs. I help organize local charity drives and support for underprivileged families in our neighborhood. I also have a close circle of friends. Many of them I have known since childhood. We meet regularly for social events, to share meals, and to celebrate festivals. These friendships provide me with a strong support system and a sense of belonging. I also participate in various local cultural events, such as Bangladeshi New Year celebrations and various traditional festivals. These events reinforce my sense of identity and connection to my heritage. My roots are firmly planted in this society. I enjoy the vibrancy of our local culture, the warmth of our community, and the familiar rhythm of life here. These social and cultural ties are irreplaceable. They make Bangladesh not just a country, but my true home.

In summary, my decision to return to Bangladesh after my trip is unwavering and absolute. My primary motivation is my family. My aging parents depend on me for their care, and my sister relies on my support for her education. I am deeply committed to my responsibilities as a son and brother. Secondly, my professional life is entirely centered in Bangladesh. As the founder and Senior Developer of Sayad IT, my presence is indispensable for the company's operations, project leadership, and future growth. I have invested years of hard work and dedication into building this business. Thirdly, my significant property holdings, including my family home and agricultural lands, along with my substantial financial investments in Bangladesh, require my direct management and presence. These assets are a cornerstone of my stability and future in the country. Lastly, my social and cultural ties, including my community involvement, religious practices, and strong friendships, firmly bind me to Faridpur. My life, responsibilities, and future are all here in Bangladesh. I look forward to returning home as soon as my trip is complete.
