

STATEMENT OF HOME TIES TO BANGLADESH

Date: February 04, 2026

Applicant: Sayad Ibna Azad

My name is Sayad Ibna Azad, and I am writing this statement to clearly explain my strong and unwavering connections to my home country, Bangladesh. I want to assure you that my purpose for this trip is purely temporary and I have every intention of returning to my life and responsibilities in Faridpur. My entire world, my past, my present, and my future, are deeply rooted in Bangladesh, centered around my beloved family, my growing business, and my plans for the future. I believe this statement will give you a clear picture of why my return is not just a preference, but an absolute certainty, driven by profound emotional and professional commitments that bind me to my homeland.

My family is the very core of my existence and the foundation upon which my life is built. I live in Jhiltuly, Faridpur, with my dear parents, Abul Kalam Azad and Tahmina. Our home in Jhiltuly is not just a house; it is the place where I grew up, where countless cherished memories were made, and where my identity was shaped. It is a home filled with warmth, love, and the comforting rhythm of family life. My father, Abul Kalam Azad, has always been a guiding light, teaching me the values of hard work and integrity. My mother, Tahmina, is the heart of our home, providing endless support and love, and her presence is something I simply cannot imagine living without. We share meals together every day, celebrate all festivals as a family, and support each other through every challenge and triumph. Beyond my parents, I have a close-knit extended family here in Faridpur – uncles, aunts, and cousins who live nearby, creating a strong community that I am an integral part of. We gather often, sharing stories, laughter, and the rich traditions of our culture. This strong family bond provides me with an invaluable sense of belonging and responsibility. As a son, I feel a deep obligation to be present for my parents as they grow older, to care for them, and to ensure their comfort and well-being. Leaving them for an extended period is simply unthinkable, as my presence in their daily lives is something we all value tremendously. My childhood in Jhiltuly, Faridpur, was filled with simple joys and a strong sense of community. I remember playing cricket with my friends in the local fields, attending school just a short walk from our home, and experiencing the unique charm of our town. These experiences have woven a deep emotional tapestry that connects me intrinsically to this place. Faridpur is not just a location on a map for me; it is home, the place where my roots run deepest, and where my heart truly belongs. The thought of being away from this comfort and familiarity for anything more than a temporary visit fills me with a sense of longing for its eventual return. My family's happiness and security are paramount to me, and my role in contributing to that, both emotionally and practically, is something I take very seriously.

My professional life is another powerful anchor keeping me firmly grounded in Bangladesh. I am a DEVELOPER at SAYAD IT, a company that I am deeply invested in, both professionally and personally. At SAYAD IT, I am not just an employee; I am a crucial part of our team, responsible for developing innovative software solutions and managing key client projects. My daily tasks involve designing and implementing new systems, maintaining existing applications, and collaborating closely with clients to understand their needs and deliver high-quality technology solutions. My expertise and dedication are vital for the smooth operation and continued growth of SAYAD IT. We are a young and dynamic company, and my contributions directly impact our success and reputation within the local IT sector. We have several ongoing projects with important clients, and my absence, even for a short period, would disrupt these projects significantly, potentially causing delays and financial losses for the company and affecting our clients' businesses. My work provides me with financial stability, allowing me to support my family and plan for my future. I am proud of the work we do at SAYAD IT and I have ambitious plans for the company's expansion, including exploring new markets and hiring more local talent, thereby contributing to the economic development of my community. Furthermore, I have made significant investments in my future here in Bangladesh. I own a plot of land in Faridpur, a place I purchased with my hard-earned savings. This plot is not just an asset; it represents a lifelong dream and a concrete plan to build my own family home there in the coming years. This is a project that I am incredibly passionate about and one that requires my presence and oversight. The land is a tangible testament to my commitment to establishing a permanent and prosperous life in Faridpur. My financial commitments also extend to my family home, where I contribute regularly to its maintenance and any improvements. These professional and financial responsibilities are not just obligations; they are opportunities for growth and prosperity that are entirely dependent on my continued presence and active involvement in Bangladesh.

The reasons why I must return to Bangladesh are clear, compelling, and deeply personal. First and foremost are my family obligations. As I mentioned, my parents, Abul Kalam Azad and Tahmina, rely on my presence, support, and care. They are at an age where they appreciate my daily company and assistance, and I consider it my sacred duty to be there for them. My absence would create a significant void in their lives and in the functioning of our family unit. I envision building my own family in Bangladesh in the near future, getting married, and raising my children surrounded by our rich culture and the love of our extended family. This future is inextricably linked to my home country. Secondly, my business, SAYAD IT, requires my full and uninterrupted attention. My role as a DEVELOPER is critical to our projects, our client relationships, and our strategic growth.

The company cannot thrive, or even operate effectively, without my active participation. I have dedicated years to building my career and contributing to SAYAD IT, and abandoning that progress is simply not an option. My professional reputation and the livelihoods of others at SAYAD IT depend on my commitment. Thirdly, my property in Faridpur, the plot of land I own, is a major personal investment and a cornerstone of my future plans. I intend to build my dream home there, a place where I will live and raise my own family. This project requires my direct supervision and financial commitment, and it signifies my long-term intent to remain in Bangladesh. My cultural ties are also incredibly strong. Bangladesh is not just a country; it is my heritage. I celebrate all our traditional festivals, participate in community events, and cherish the unique cultural fabric of our society. These are experiences that define me and connect me to my roots in a profound way that cannot be replicated elsewhere. My entire social circle, my closest friends, and my community are all here in Faridpur. My future plans are exclusively focused on Bangladesh. I intend to continue growing SAYAD IT, contributing to the local economy, establishing my own family, and actively participating in my community. Every aspect of my life, from my emotional bonds with my family to my professional aspirations and financial investments, is firmly rooted in Bangladesh. My journey outside Bangladesh will be temporary, driven by a specific purpose, and my unwavering commitment to my home country ensures that I will return to continue building my life there without hesitation.
